People in Florida
retirement communities are proud to admit that TV shapes their days—and
is their link to the outside world

By Joanmarie Kalter

Thunk. The iron horseshoe hits the post. Then another, sailing behind it, arcing gently, sweeping across the green lawn, blurring into the blue of the sky—thunk. But Arley Sica, 78, is no longer thinking of horseshoes. No, lounging on a bench beside the court, carefully smoothing a wrinkle in his tan leisure slacks, Sica has his mind on other things. Trends in the country, trends in the world. Trends, he tells a reporter, that he follows through television.

"I do like to tune in on Washington Week," he says. "And I'll tell you why.

Those fellows are specialists. They have contacts in the Pentagon, entree to Congress. They're very important for understanding the news of the week." Sica, a former hotel operator, hospital administrator and founding member of the Jaycees, says he's just as interested in civic issues today as before he retired to Florida. "The wife and I will view our friend Mr. Rukeyser on Wall Street Week, of course. And we go for the specials, for 20/20, for Barbara Walters, for any program of deep significance. . . . She enjoys the afternoon soaps, and I'm a sports enthusiast. And we do enjoy Cosby, Dynasty, Dallas. . . ."

As we wind up our chat, some 40 minutes later, the grounds around us are deserted. There's only the sound of the wind rustling through palm trees, the drifting thwack of a tennis ball and the lap of water in a distant pool. This is late afternoon, says Sica, rising to survey the em-

This is retirement in America—as glimpsed at On Top of the World, a middle-class condominium community of some 8000 in Clearwater, Fla.—and it is surprising in many ways. If the favorite pastime of most Americans is watching television, their second most popular pastime, as anyone writing about TV learns, is saying that they don't. But not here. The retired love television, and they're delighted to say so. "I turn it on first thing in the morning for the Today show," says Helen Martin over a plate of macaroni and cheese at a potluck dinner with her neighbors. "I like Gumbo and Jane and Willard Scott. I think the whole bunch of them are nice." When dinner breaks, they crowd around, letting loose with long lists of treasured shows. "I watch Dynasty-Hotel-Falcon Crest-Knots Landing-and-Dallas," one woman says in a rush. "And basketball-baseball-and-football. And then we find a good show like North and South and tape it so we don't miss a bit." To be sure, some disapprove of TV's sex. ("We already know what goes on in the bedroom. They don't have to show us.") And the "boom-bang violence" of shows like Miami Vice is almost universally loathed. ("Those couldn't be metal cars they're always crashing. They must be paper.") But, when told that social scientists find the elderly underrepresented on TV, find older men more often "bad," older women more often "unsuccessful," and older people in general treated with more disrespect than any other age group, these retired people merely laugh. "Television is the best thing that was ever invented," says one woman. "That's all I can say."

Indeed, until not long ago, broadcasters and advertisers shunned this audience. The word "elderly" conjured visions of illness, poverty, loneliness—a broken old man in a nursing home, his pockets filled with complaints. And yes, of those aged 65 and older, one in six is poor, one in 20 is institutionalized. Poverty is especially prevalent among women, many of them widows, who make up some 70 per cent of the elderly poor. → tiness, the time most people here are home watching television, flicking to Gary Collins on Hour Magazine, guessing along with Wheel of Fortune. And now he'll be off, too, he adds politely. He just may catch the news.

But for many, and for more and more, this is not so. There is a new generation among older people, whose retirement now spans some 30 years—it is affluent, it is growing, and it is young.

It is the first retired generation to age with modern medicine, staying active and energetic. It is the first to draw a significant income from both Social Security and private pensions. And it is the first to leave the work force in large numbers before old age. Indeed, by 1981, more than half of all retired men had tapped their Social Security pensions while still short of 65. Children of the Depression, young adults of the Second World War, these were also the wage earners in the boom years of the postwar American economy. Today, as their houses have soared in value, their expenses have dropped—children are grown, mortgages paid. According to a startling study published last summer by The Conference Board, a business-research group, poverty rates among the elderly are now lower than for others, while those aged 65 to 75 enjoy more income per person than those under 45: "The older consumer, so cavalierly ignored by so many marketers, is in fact the prime customer in the upscale market."

And so, slowly but ever more surely, the market has responded—old is now new on television. On CBS's Murder, She Wrote, Jessica nabs villains (and ratings) with the power of her nimble mind; on NBC's The Golden Girls, the saucy widow Blanche hits it off with a new man at her husband's funeral. Joan Collins promotes beauty products at 53; Lauren Bacall breezes in for a cup of decaf in a market once defined by the dowdy Dr. Welby. And even grandparents happily gobble Oreo Cookies 'n' Cream. The medium is getting their message—consumers in retirement are not ready to be old; what they seek, instead, is a final chance to be young.

It is April in Clearwater, and sunshine showers the streets, streaming across the terrace of the recreation center, bathing the golf course, drenching the pool. To the visitor, this could be summer camp, or even Disneyland, for On Top of the World prides itself on having no two apartment buildings look alike. There's the Austrian Alpine, with Tyrolean trim; and Chinese Cathay, with a pagoda top. English Gothic is a confection in pale pink; while Emerald Isle, in green and white, looms like a giant peppermint candy.

Condos here sell from $40,000 to $70,000—less like splendor than middle-class comfort. Yet comfort it is. Blanche Mahrle, just in from golf, stops off at the terrace for a Good Neighbors Tea. She and her husband worked at the Ford Motor Company in Michigan—she a secretary, he an analyst—and both retired early. Turning 62 last December, she spent her first Social Security check on an Ultrasuede suit. Elizabeth Lechner, once a secretary in New York, now relaxes on a lawn chair by the pool. "Financially I am better off now than I've ever been," she says. "Years ago you sat in a rocking chair, but a lot of us now are just starting to live." Even a widow like Evelyn Malandrucolo says life is sweet on her Social Security, her pension from the garment-workers union, and the profit from her house in the Bronx—bought for $27,000 and sold for $75,000. And inside the Rec Center, John Warner, former salesman for Atlantic Richfield in Pennsylvania, today is selling tickets to a picnic. "Our parents' generation worked till the very end," he muses. "But not us. I wanted my time free." So when his company offered early retirement—at 58—he took it. And now he smiles. "Wanna buy a ticket?"

Within this haven of leisure, TV is basic to the rhythm of life. Where days were once measured by work—a train at 8:02, a coffee break at 11, and the kids home by 4—now it is television that drives and paces the day. It not only fills their time, it structures their time, carving two o'clock from three o'clock, morning from afternoon, Monday from Wednesday—like the seasons, like the sunset, like a heartbeat. "We used to see TV maybe three nights a week," says Albert Connor, a retired →

lieutenant with the Philadelphia police. "Now we have time, and it's something to do, isn't it? Now we watch all seven days." He sits beside the pool, a lean man, tall in his chair, a hat shading his face, and his hands in his lap. "We start out in the morning watching CBS from seven to nine. Then there's the news at noon and Hour Magazine at four. After the news at night, we watch the Wheel of Fortune and the Pyramid show and . . . "

Television has its rules, like the games the retired here play: golf, bingo, bridge. Like the dances they attend, organized by theme, where women all dress in polka dots, say, where steps learned in class are performed in a line: start with your left and step, twirl, kick, dip. This is life made secure, freedom with order, and television echoes those bounds. "I like the sweet ones, like Highway to Heaven," laughs Sophia Karageorges in the offices of the village newspaper. "The ones where things come out good in the end, because life isn't like that. So you find it where you can." Clarence Mahrle, at home in his recliner, enjoys reruns of Hawaii Five-O, Police Woman and Barney Miller. "They solve the problems and it comes to a finish, which you know from the beginning anyway." They live, like characters in the "sweet" shows they watch, in a man-made world, a town without history, built less than 20 years ago from an orange grove. Like those characters, they make new friends, their neighbors pop in, life is defined by amusements. And so when they watch, it's less for escape than extension, inseparably part of their patterns—a world at one with their own.

Yet it's also a window, a perch, a chance to stay close to the stream of life. Here, far from old friends, from children, from work and the old home town, television bridges the distance; it keeps them involved. For widowed women—outnumbering single men at these ages by 3 to 1—TV is even family. So what do the retired here watch? News in the morning, news at noon, news at six and eleven. "I watch them all, oh yes," says Kay Wiest, a former Government secretary. "I like to keep up with the times." The vast majority subscribes to cable—and former residents of Chicago, New York and Atlanta follow home-town news and home-team sports through cable's superstations. Those from large cities look to public television to replace the culture they left behind. As Ann Welk, from Chicago, says, "When Pavarotti is on, I don't move from my chair!" And the No. 1, all-out, most popular program is Wheel of Fortune. To people who pride themselves on keeping active, staying alert, it offers more than vicarious jackpots. "The whole world stops for that show," says a former tool engineer from Indiana. Why? "We can guess the answer before [the contestants] do, and we enjoy that."

Here is a generation for whom the wonder of television has never quite worn off. Each can recall his very first set—bought with a bonus from the Army, purchased with a loan to surprise a son. "It's all still new to us," says Mary Bowen, widow of a library maintenance man. Remember that little magnifying glass in front of it? they'll ask, laughing. Remember how the neighbors would all crowd in to see it? Though they have color, cable and a VCR today, they still do not turn to it idly, nor let it drone on as background. "We're very organized about our TV viewing," says Letty Brasovan. "We have our guide and we mark our programs ahead of time for the whole week." And when they watch, they really watch. "I prefer not to have any friends around," says Kay Wiest, wearing silvered wing-tip glasses. "They talk too much, and I'd rather concentrate."

Their viewing habits seem to cut across economic and educational lines. Twenty miles away in St. Petersburg is the Sunshine Center, a yellow-brick building providing recreation and other services for the retired in residential hotels and mobile homes around the city. On this bright Sunday afternoon, there is to be a stage show, featuring vaudeville entertainers from what these seniors jokingly call "the has-been circuit," and a crowd that will grow to some 200 people has already gathered at both entrances, ladies in flowered Sunday dresses, men in straw hats, some with walkers, many with canes, those in front gripping the door handles for the moment when, some 40 minutes from now, the center will open and the crowd will pour in, the staff cautioning, "Don't hurry! Slow down!" Those without seats in the auditorium will be left to watch from closed-circuit television in a room nearby. Like the residents of On Top of the World, these seniors are white, middle-class and mostly Protestant, having come from homes in the Northeast and Midwest. But, because it is a public facility, there are also the poor, and because few here live in a private development, patrolled by security guards, their lives are shaped, like those of so many Americans, by crime.

"I watch television quite a lot. I can't afford to do anything else," says a man from Vermont, living on Social Security alone. "I would rather be over on the beach, having a few and dancing." Still, he does like Hardcastle and McCormick. Ann Desotelle, a former factory worker at "Generous Electric" in New Hampshire, is comfortably supported by her son. "But you don't go out alone at night, honey," she says. "That's why television is so terrific." And she launches into praise for last night's Golden Girls, an episode that dealt with robbery. Indeed, only a few years ago, say the seniors here, St. Pete was safe. But today, the crime they left Northern cities to avoid has crept up from Miami to stalk them here. And though statistics show crime rates lower for seniors than others, they perceive themselves vulnerable, so fear it more. Jennie Renniger, an elegant lady wearing a jaunty safari hat, is one resident who was robbed. Having traveled, in her day, to some 131 countries, she recently bought her first TV and now enjoys travelogues.

As Americans age, ratings show, they watch television more. And the retired who have gone on to become "elderly" seem to watch it most of all. Jim Nall flicks off Barnaby Jones when a visitor comes into his room. "I usually watch it from three to four," he says. Nall, at 77, is a tall man with a thick white mustache, a man who worked on the railroad in Kentucky until retiring to play golf at On Top of the World. But with a stroke several years later, "I lost my rhythm, couldn't play." And when he could no longer cook or keep up his apartment, he came here, a few miles away, to Bayview Gardens, a life-care facility providing meals and medical care. "That Jack Nicklaus [Masters] program last week was a thrill," he says now. "I love to see an old man win."

For these truly elderly, television has become a lifeline, an umbilical cord, their one real link to the outside world. And if they loved it before, they live for it now. "Oh, I'd be lost, terribly lost without it," says Miriam Hartline, 84, in a bright blue dress with red buttons. Watching it, in fact, is a point of pride, an act of defiance against the decay of age. "It does help stimulate your mind," she says. "There are some ladies here"—her voice dropping to a whisper—"who just sit and sleep. They don't know nothing from nothing. It's a shame, I don't want that to happen. I don't! I watch as much as I can." And for many, it is their primary source of companionship. Ruth Pringle, 92, sits in an easy chair with a crocheted afghan on her legs, speaking of television characters as if they were personal friends. "That Belvedere is a honey," she says happily. "They ought to give him an hour." Indeed, if TV in early retirement was basic to the values and rhythm and vision of life, it now breathes life itself; it's their last and most faithful companion, the one that will never die. Walter Tamm, 96, likes to show snapshots of a woman he befriended at Bayview. "For two and a half years we were very close," he says. "But about six months ago . . . her mind started to go, and we buried her on the 11th. . . ."

How to Outfox TV's New Breed of Macho Men

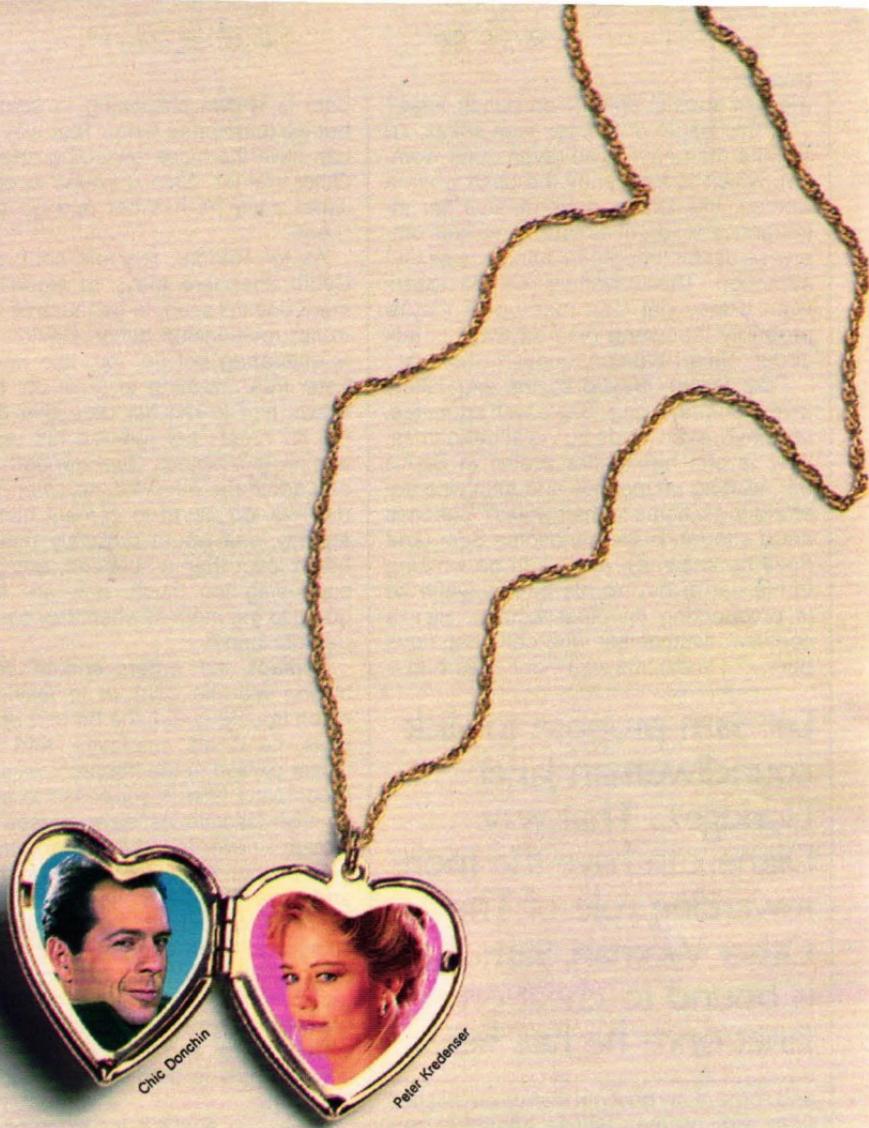

To even up the Battle of the Sexes, this expert offers help to the women of Cheers and Moonlighting

By Helen Gurley Brown

I think the single girls I see on television are making all the wrong moves by not making any moves at all. It's good television but bad life.

Has the worldwide conservative movement overtaken sex? Even Ronald Reagan got the girl sooner in his movies than some of the men in today's television series.

In two of the most successful romantic comedies on television, NBC's Cheers and ABC's Moonlighting, the girls seem interminably unwilling or unable to bed their men; or when one does, as in the second season of Cheers, the affair lasts only a season. It's as though Cheers' Sam and Diane couldn't break up fast enough to resume their off-again, on-again romance. As for Moonlighting's David and Maddie, enough already! As I write this, it looks as if "it" might happen, but I'm half dead with waiting.

No single man or woman I know would hang around someone they love for 26 weeks with nothing happening, especially if those involved were Cheers' Ted Danson and Shelley Long or Moonlighting's Cybill Shepherd and Bruce Willis. In some of those episodes it's as though the director shouted "Dialogue" instead of "Action." The talk is witty, entertaining and even sexy, but what romantic cou- → ple can subsist entirely on punch lines?

In this battle of the sex-less sexes, I'd say the men have it all (even other women), which is frequently the case when a woman, like Diane, subordinates her intelligence to, or, like Maddie, wastes otherwise useful thought in, mindless sexual attraction. These women will be losers even if they get their men—plus they're probably the wrong men anyway . . . talk about "Smart Women, Foolish Choices!"

Take Diane, played by the exquisitely lovely Shelley Long. She's well educated, sensitive, even reads books at ballgames. Why is she hiding her brains in Sam's bar, waiting on machos and men who are afraid to go home to their wives? Chances are if she lands the handsome Sam (and does he know it!), she'll still be working in his bar or having his babies while he is prospecting for other women. He's a confused womanizer who calls her "love bunny." I know him well—or I knew him—

Let Sam propose to slick councilwoman Janet Eldridge.... That way, Diane can have the more rewarding role of The Other Woman. Sam is bound to cheat on Janet once he has her.

and some of my best girl friends are hooked right now on men whose attraction certainly isn't apparent to the rest of us, or, like Sam, whose attraction is all too apparent but one they ought to try to resist: Sam is a hunk with a hamburger heart.

While I realize the tension of the unresolved relationship makes for suspenseful television, here's one way the writers could bail Diane out of her thralldom: let Sam propose to slick councilwoman Janet Eldridge (played by Kate Mulgrew), with whom he's been fooling around. (In the season-ending cliffhanger, of course, Sam is shown proposing to someone—but we're not sure who.) That way, Diane can have the more rewarding role of The Other Woman. Sam is bound to cheat on Janet once he has her and go back to Diane.

As for Maddie, the role cool, elegant Cybill Shepherd plays in Moonlighting, there doesn't seem to be much of a future in her relationship either. David's humor is endearing but he, too, like Sam, is a Peter Pan unwilling to grow up. Maddie needs him to run her detective agency, but he needs her too—as his employer and his love object. Quel standoff: neither can admit the need for the other. If Maddie married David to cement him to the agency, she would probably find him a better lover than a husband, but I'm presupposing too much; how are the two going to get married when they can't even get into bed?!

Perhaps the writers should consider having Maddie give in to David. How much trouble could she be in?! She's the boss, he is the employee, and it's the lesser person in the hierarchical scale of a company who is supposed to suffer in an affair (secretaries leave; bosses stay)—though I never found it to work that way.

Of course, the writers could do a switch and have Maddie make the first official move on him. This could cause David such shock and chagrin—being chased around the desk and told he could either give in or lose his job—that he would file charges of sexual harassment. Listen, I'm simply trying to think of options—right now the girls in both series are in a real stalemate.

If we can analyze for a moment how the girls got into their stalemate, I think there are valid reflections of present-day mores in these shows. Diane and Maddie represent a new kind of post-feminist woman, rebelling against passive men! They thought they wanted a man who could cry at poetry readings or the flight of whooping cranes. But now if a man really does that, you want to hit him! So Diane and Maddie are going for men who are throwbacks to the macho Bogart, Wayne and Gable types, men who are unintimidated—even unimpressed—by a woman's "smarts" and who like to call the shots. OK, who can blame the TV heroines for fancying something of a take-charge man? What we can "blame" them for, or at least regret on their behalf, is their fancying a man who ignores their brains and even patronizes them (did Bogart, Wayne and Gable do that?!); and with sexual charm the man's main lure, they don't even take advantage of that!

The Moonlighting writers could have Maddie make the first official move on David, with him being chased around the desk and told he could either give in or lose his job.

Diane is the worse off. She may have Sam's grudging, unspoken respect but he'll never let it surface. And though he may secretly adore her—occasionally not so secretly—his path is strewn with cast-aside adored ones. This relationship, it seems to me, promises only future pain and present humiliation for Diane. She may seem a feminist but is actually caught up in the time-honored, one-sided love affair in which a masochist is more in love with a semi-sadist than he with her.

Maddie is better off. I don't think she's actually suffering. Maddie just puts up with somebody who's aggravating a lot of the time and frustrating and irritating the rest.

Listen, both of these women—and aren't the writers smart?—are dealing with a real-life condition: men who are unwilling to face the responsibility and lack of excitement of a long-term relationship. All Diane is getting out of the friendship with Sam is great verbal sparring at which she wins only some of the time. Maybe she feels working in the bar near her love-object is better than brunch with girl friends or killing herself with aerobics or the Nautilus machines—well known time-occupiers of women without men—but I wonder. Maddie isn't in such bad shape in terms of S & S (sacrifice and suffering), but she's so involved with David professionally she doesn't get much of a chance at an outside life in which she might meet a prince.

This is what I would tell these girls if they insist on sticking with their men:

For Maddie, I suggest she make David a partner in her agency. This will give him sufficient security and self-esteem to calm down and develop his more stable and mature side. He'll be more responsible. She ought also to warm up a bit and act more carefree. He'll be hers for as long as she can stand him—and the agency will prosper. The peril in their relationship will be boredom on her part.

As for Diane, she will have to absent herself from Sam again in order to make him desperately want her and stop fooling around. He is so into the "I only want the girl I can't have" syndrome that Diane must be that kind of elusive girl if she hopes to get him permanently. She also ought to give up her job in the bar and work in some more upscale occupation. Being with him all the time makes her too familiar, part of the scenery, easily taken for granted despite her occasional attention-getting outbursts and protests about his behavior. She ought also to wear sophisticated clothes and get a "drop dead" hair style. Artful makeup wouldn't hurt. Sam likes his girls on the provocative side. Working in the bar makes it impossible for Diane to accentuate her sexy looks; she'd stop traffic and start fights. If she must keep the job in the bar, she ought to announce that it's part of a long-term research project—that she is gathering data on that endangered species, the macho male whose courage is in the bottle.

Could Diane and Sam and David and Maddie, despite my doubts, marry and live happily ever after? Not completely. Their series would be canceled. END

Connie Does Her 'Fling'

Mario Casilli
ABC's Hotel will have a conspicuous vacancy in its cast during the first three days of shooting for next season's opener. Connie Sellecca (above) has been given the producers' OK to finish up "The Last Fling," her upcoming ABC TV-movie with John Ritter. Sellecca says she's grateful that Hotel is being so accommodating with its schedule since "I have always wanted to do a romantic comedy." In "Fling," Sellecca's character discovers—before the wedding—that her fiancé is cheating on her. So she decides to do likewise—with Ritter, who plays a divorce lawyer. Still, she insists, the movie "makes a positive statement about marriage." Ritter's character, she explains, is always trying to get his clients to reconcile, and her character is really old-fashioned at heart.

Howie Pushes His Product

In addition to his duties at St. Eligius Hospital, Howie Mandel (who plays Dr. Wayne Fiscus on NBC's St. Elsewhere) is a card-carrying stand-up comedian. Back in May, HBO televised the Chicago stop on his "North American Watusi Tour." More recently, Mandel (right) released a new comedy album, "Fits like a Glove." To ensure his record's rise up the album charts, Mandel says that he sneaks into record stores at night, pushes his display up near the doors and places his album in front of others.

"It's my personal marketing technique," he says. "I'm not a subtle person."

Very Fast Copy

In Kooky Classics, premiering on the Disney Channel Aug. 3, puppeteer-ventriloquist Shari Lewis (above) dances to a medley of classic movie tunes with a life-size puppet of Fred Astaire. How, you ask? "Gingerly," answers Lewis. There are also guest appearances by Hush Puppy, Charlie Horse and, of course, Lamb Chop, who demonstrates her abilities on the piano. "It's an amazing thing," says Lewis. "When I learned Japanese for my recent tour with the National Symphony of Japan, Lamp Chop suddenly started speaking Japanese. And since I play the piano, Lamb Chop can play the piano, too." Astonishing, isn't it?

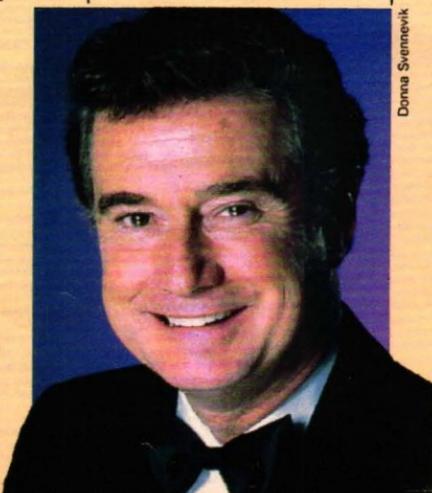

Get the Point?

Regis Philbin's Life-styles celebrates four seasons on cable (Aug. 2, Lifetime) with an anniversary show featuring clips of the series' most memorable moments. One of the more bizarre highlights, notes Philbin (below, right), won't be on the anniversary show. "I remember very vividly having New York's first licensed acupuncturist demonstrate acupuncture on my neck-ache." The treatment? "Needles all over my face. It didn't cure me," admits Philbin, "but it was fascinating television with all those needles sticking out of me."

Political Affairs

In "LBJ," an upcoming NBC TV-movie, Morgan Brittany (right) portrays Alice Glass. During the 1930s—this production alleges—Alice Glass was romantically involved with Lyndon B. Johnson (played here by Randy Quaid). What was Glass like? "She had the ability to wrap men around her finger," says Brittany. "She was very intelligent, very sexy, and she knew how to get what she wanted." In researching the role, Brittany discovered that Glass even planned the future President's wardrobe. "I do think," she says, "people are

The plot revolves around Toma coming to a high school to preach about the dangers of drugs and alcohol—something he does in real life, too. The tough-talking ex-cop (a veteran of 21 years on the force) had made cameo appearances on Toma, but has never taken an acting class. "I don't need lessons," he says. "I'm straight off the streets of New York and New Jersey. That's the best place to learn anything."

Face Value

Bruce Boxleitner spent part of his summer in Utah shooting a Western for the Disney

Channel, "Down the Long Hills," based on a Louis L'Amour best seller. While there, the Scarecrow and Mrs. King star (below) proved the power of celebrity: during shooting outside Heber City, the film crew avoided overtime parking charges by giving rangers autographed glossies of Boxleitner. "I guess up there in Utah," he muses, "they don't see famous people that often, other than Robert Redford, who lives there." Boxleitner's wife, Kathryn Holcomb, also stars in the movie. It's the first time the couple has worked together since meeting 10 years ago on the set of another Western, "The Macahans."

The cast included Richard Burton (above), Laurence Olivier, Sir John Gielgud and Sir Ralph Richardson. So the filming of the nine-hour British movie "Wagner" (cut to four hours for its upcoming U.S. presentation on PBS's Great Performances) could have been as tumultuous as the music of the title character, 19th-century German composer Richard Wagner. Instead, says British director Tony Palmer, there was a decided absence of thundering egos. In the title role, the oft-difficult Burton was anything but. "We never had a moment's trouble with him," Palmer recalls. "After the shooting, he married my production assistant [Sally Hay]!" And directing the three British "knights" in the only scenes they'd ever done together? "Absolutely delightful," Palmer declares. "They were like contemporary Marx Brothers."

Take His Life—Please!

Heard the one about the Soviet immigrant who came to the U.S. for a new life and wound up starring in a TV sitcom about a Soviet immigrant starting a new life in the U.S.? Yakov Smirnoff did—he's the former Russian cruise-ship comic signed for What a Country!, a syndicated series about an American citizenship class. Back in the USSR, relates Smirnoff (left), there was a Ministry of Humor that cleared each comic's material annually—"you had to stay with the routine for the whole year." But Smirnoff doesn't have to worry about that any more: he became a U.S. citizen at Ellis Island on July 3. Now, he can practice the American way of comedy—using the same jokes for a lifetime.

Tough Act to Follow?

It's seldom easy to take over a role made popular by another actor. And it's even less easy to change the character when you do, but that isn't stopping Jack Armstrong (above), the new Greg Nelson on ABC's All My Children. Armstrong, formerly on Ryan's Hope, Loving and Guiding Light, says that he's trying to light a fire under Greg. "I'd like to see him take a stand, speak out," says the actor. "There's a feeling that good guys aren't supposed to make waves. think they should."

Busy Woman

Between juggling her medical practice and figuring out just who she really loves, Dr. Marlena Brady of NBC's Days of Our Lives (played by Deidre Hall, below) is having quite a time of it lately. But if you think her life is hectic, you should see Hall's schedule. In the fall, she'll be co-starring (as a widow with three kids who moves in with her father-in-law) in NBC's new prime-time drama Our House—and still working on DOL. What this means, of course, is tight scheduling. Hall will work Saturdays taping DOL and weekdays on Our House. Says Hall, understandably, "I'm numb."

Old Home Week

Years ago in Texas, actress Pamela Long used to play love scenes with actor David Forsyth. These days, as the head writer for NBC's Search for Tomorrow, Long is writing love scenes—for David Forsyth (who plays Hogan McCleary). "I didn't realize how much I missed that body," cracks

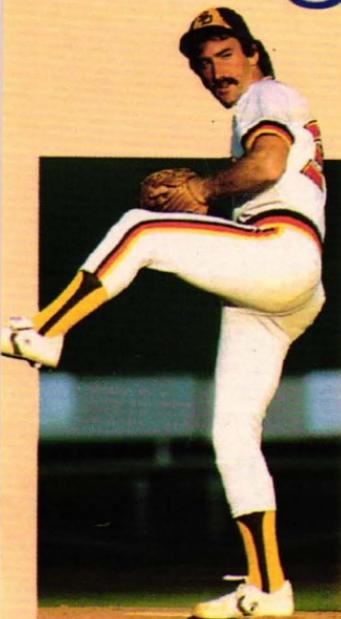

Long. "It's good to be looking at his mug again." This week, she's cooked up quite a twist in the Hogan-Liza-Patty triangle: putting Hogan and Patty in adjoining hotel rooms. The resulting fireworks are guaranteed to cast a pall on Hogan's planned marriage to Liza.

Casting Calls

A pair of successful pro athletes are about to get big breaks in Hollywood. San Diego Padres right-hander Eric Show (above) has been tapped to play the title role in "The Christy Mathewson Story," a biography of the New York Giants Hall of Fame hurler. In 17 big-league seasons (1900-16), "Big Six" posted a record of 373-188, notching 13 20-win campaigns. The last time we looked, Show was more than 300 wins behind; but, says producer Gerry Gross, "at least we won't have to teach Eric to throw the ball over the plate." . . . Meanwhile, producer David Field has selected Denver Nuggets all-star forward Alex English to co-star (with Gregory Peck and Jamie Lee Curtis) in an upcoming theatrical movie, "Amazing Grace and Chuck." Not surprisingly, English will play an NBA basketball player, in this case a Boston Celtic. As part of his performance, English (right) will actually suit up with the Celts for an Oct. 10 preseason game in Boston Garden against the 76ers. . . . NFL Films has some bizarre specials in the works for this fall. "Autumn Ritual," an hour-long program for syndication, will feature comments on the game from such unlikely savants as poet Allen Ginsberg, G. Gordon Liddy and composer Philip

Glass. Also on hand: a psychology professor from North Adams (Mass.) State College, who will analyze profanity in pro football. "The segment will set a record for bleeps," says NFL Films' Steve Sabol. "We're probably going to have to bleep the professor, too." . . . Later in the season, Sabol and company will select "The NFL's Greatest Games."

The greatest, he says, remains "the 1967 Packers-

Cowboys NFL championship game," played in frigid Green Bay. "It had spectacular offense and defense and was won on a courageous [Green Bay] drive. It was so cold the Cowboys couldn't hear [QB Don] Meredith call plays in the third and fourth quarters because his lips were frozen shut."

News Update

Crises Help ABC's Nightline Boost Audience

ABC's Nightline, with Ted Koppel, has become the fastest-growing news show on television, partly as a result of the U.S. attacks on Libya and the Chernobyl nuclear disaster. Average ratings for Nightline are 12.5 per cent higher than they were at this time last year. The program is reaching 5.4 million households compared with 4.8 million a year ago, an increase of 600,000. "Ratings for Nightline always improve during a crisis period," said ABC spokeswoman Laura Wessner, "but the fact that these figures are averages shows that Nightline can grow during a noncrisis time as well." But Wessner admitted that another factor in the growth is that, since January, 15 additional stations have been carrying the show live.

NBC's Tonight, with Johnny Carson, is still the leader in the time period with 6.9 million households, an increase of 172,000 over last year. CBS, running such action/adventure shows as Magnum, P.I. and Night Heat, has lost 172,000 viewers and reaches 4.7 million households.

Another factor helping Nightline's gain is that, although the same number of Americans are watching late-night television this year as last, fewer people are watching cable and independent stations, according to ABC's audience-research experts.

NBC Has No Plans to Cut News Staff

With ABC and CBS cutting news personnel, NBC News staffers have been worried about possible layoffs there. But NBC News president Larry Grossman says his network has no plans to follow suit. ABC has trimmed 70 positions from its news operation this year and, by the end of the year, CBS will have eliminated 215 jobs over a two-year period. NBC now has the largest staff of the three networks, with 1300 employees. CBS has fewer than 1150, and ABC has about 1100. Cable News Network, which offers round-the-clock programming, has 2000 news employees.

Grossman says that NBC will try to streamline its news operations and reduce costs without cutting staff. Two years ago, NBC trimmed 86 news positions after two programs, First Camera (a magazine show) and NBC News Overnight, were canceled. "We've been through a lot already," Grossman says. "Our budget for next year will increase slightly over what it was this year."

Grossman says that NBC will be converting its camera equipment from three-quarter-inch tape minicams to a smaller and easier-to-hold half-inch minicam. This means it will no longer be necessary to

Fire Exit

The blaze that swept through La Mirage on last spring's Dynasty cliffhanger has not only removed Pamela Bellwood from the cast as Claudia, it will also spell the end for Ken Howard's character, Garrett Boydston, who perishes trying to save Claudia. At one point, the producers also considered sacrificing another victim to the flames: Amanda (played up till now by the departing Catherine Oxenberg), who would undergo plastic surgery and emerge looking like Karen Cellini (who replaces Oxenberg in the role this fall). But then it was decided that the two actresses look enough alike that Amanda—and viewers—can be spared that ordeal.

Blood Is Thicker

Alan Thicke, who plays Jason Seaver on ABC's Growing Pains, has not worked for Fred Silverman since Silverman produced the ill-fated syndicated talk show Thicke of the Night. Now the two are getting back together—for the next NBC Perry Mason movie, which Silverman is co-producing and in which Thicke has a guest-starring role. "Despite a lot of rumors that Fred and I don't talk, we actually get along famously," insists Thicke. Oh, did we forget to mention he'll be playing a talk-show host who ends up murdered? Quips Thicke: "This is the second time Fred has cast me in this role."

Frank! Frank! I'm Back!

He's not a regular anymore, but Rene Enriquez will be showing up on Hill Street Blues again as Capt. (formerly Lt.) Ray Calletano in two episodes this season. One story has Ray's Polk Avenue precinct plagued by racial tension, forcing the new captain to call on his old boss, Capt. Frank Furillo (Daniel J. Travanti) for help.

No Hard Feelings?

After being dropped from ABC's Spenser: For Hire as the Boston private eye's girl friend, Susan, Barbara Stock will turn up this season on CBS's Murder, She Wrote—as a suspect in a circus slaying. "I'm happy to be back in L.A.," says

Stock. "But I was a little surprised to be written out of Spenser. When they hired a new woman producer, I thought, 'Great, she'll know what to do with my character.' Well, she did." The show will reveal that Susan's left for San Francisco. Could she return later? "I have heard no word about next year," says Stock. "They decided to write me out and have nothing more to do with me."

Ms. President

She's a former U.S. senator who becomes the first woman Vice President and then—after the young Chief Executive suddenly dies—takes over the reins of government. That's the premise of an as-yet-unitled ABC TV-movie, which is now being researched by former MacGyver executive producer Jerry Ludwig. Besides visiting Vice President Bush's Capitol office, interviewing White House correspondents and chatting with the Secret Service, Ludwig says that he tried to make contact with former Vice Presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro—but she wouldn't talk to him.

SOME HITS, SOME MISSES

Thanks to Dick Friedman and Mike Lipton for not overlooking 227's Jackée Harry as one of the best female discoveries of the season ["Reviewing the Past Season: The Best and Worst We Saw," July 12]. They also didn't forget to mention Estelle Getty, who holds NBC's The Golden Girls together. And it took a very clever eye not to miss Cheers' Woody Harrelson as "Best Male Replacement."

Ansel Sprouse
San Bernardino, Cal.

Your reviewers of the season's hits and flops completely overlooked an incredible performance by Megan Follows in PBS's Wonderworks' "Anne of Green Gables." You should have created a special category for this film—"Best Children's Movie That You Had to Be an Adult to Fully Appreciate."

John Koster
Paramus, N.J.

"Male Discovery of the Year" should have gone to Barry Manilow for his totally captivating acting debut in "Copacabana," which in turn should have gotten the "I Didn't Think They Made Movies like That Any More" award.

Amy Bradley
Stevens Point, Wis.

I fully agree with your choice of Jan Niklas as "Male Discovery of the Year." His performance in NBC's Peter the Great stole the show. I was beginning to wonder if I was the only one who'd noticed.

Cheryl Savoie

Your authors' assessment of CBS's Alice in Wonderland was obviously the work of jaded adults. My grandchildren loved every minute.

Delores J. Wilk

Enough already! Even before the start of the season, "Worst Rip-Off" Hollywood Beat was being pigeonholed as a bad rip-off of Miami

FAIR GAME

I feel sorry for Ted Turner ["Goodwill Games: Will the U.S. vs. Soviet Matchup Make Them a TV Smash?" July 5]. He may have gotten big stars (i.e., Carl Lewis and Edwin Moses) to participate in the Goodwill Games. But I don't watch the Olympics for the stars. I watch them for the tradition and pageantry. I don't see how Turner could expect to outdo the Olympics.

Kenneth Ray Odom Jr.
Augusta, Ga.

It has been said that athletes are the ambassadors of peace. Whether or not that is true, the Goodwill Games are a step in the right direction. In order for people to live together, they first must learn to play together.

Larry Sheridan
Covington, Ga.

For their opening ceremonies, the Russians forgot, however briefly, their power struggle and sent clear, strong images of peace and cooperation. Your cover's depiction of the honest American beating the shifty Russian contradicts the whole purpose of the Goodwill Games.

Caroline Albanese
Chappaqua, N.Y.

I'd like to thank the Turner Broadcasting System for sprinkling a marvelous array of commercials throughout the Goodwill Games' opening ceremonies. Thanks also to all the commentators, who explained anything we happened to miss. A triumph of broadcasting, to be sure!

To be perfectly honest, Motown Returns to the Apollo—taped in May of 1985 to mark the 50th anniversary of Harlem's legendary Apollo Theatre—is not as good as 1984's "Motown 25 . . . Yesterday, Today, Forever." But it sure comes close. Very close.

What we have here are three hours of pop and soul, jazz and blues, and rock and gospel served up by Motown's greatest artists (Stevie Wonder, Smokey Robinson, Diana Ross, Martha Reeves, the Four Tops and the Temptations), along with a supporting cast of black superstars too numerous to mention individually and even a few funky white guys (Rod Stewart, George Michael and Boy George) thrown in for good measure.

Highlights? This show has nothing but highlights, including some amazing hoofing from Gregory Hines; a sassy production number headlined by Debbie Allen, Marilyn McCoo, Jennifer Holliday, Thelma Houston and Vanessa Williams; and (not surprisingly) everything Stevie Wonder does.

Billie Holiday played the Apollo, too, although she was better known on 52nd Street. Lady Day, the subject of this week's American Masters, was the greatest jazz vocalist of her time (perhaps of all time). The only thing larger than her talent was her bent for self-destruction: heroin finally killed her in 1959, at age 44, stilling that marvelous voice much, much too soon. Her personal life was pitiable, and this 1984 BBC production makes no bones about it. Infinitely worse, though, was the racial discrimination Holiday and other blacks of her era were forced to endure. That wasn't pitiable; it was a national disgrace.

Over on the sports page, it's been an off-season to forget for the folks of the National Football League. The USFL's zillion-dollar antitrust suit against the big league has droned on all summer. Contract squabbles and mass holdouts have been the rule, not the exception. And then

A trio of newcomers and worthy repeats give a lift to this between-seasons network-movie week.

The major premiere is of David Lynch's 1980 The Elephant Man, based on the life of John Merrick, who died a celebrity in London in 1890 at the age of 27, a hide-ously deformed victim of neurofibromatosis. Rescued from a freak show by a doctor and taken in 1884 into a hospital where he became a "social" success, he seems initially a horror, a triumph of the makeup man's art. But what we get is a remarkable performance by John Hurt in creating, by voice and by the movements of one graceful and undeformed hand, a "human being" of intelligence and calm sensibility, a gentle person of aspiration and tenderness. Merrick's being emerges as a response to Anthony Hopkins' Frederick Treves, the compassionate doctor helpless in the face of the incurable, struggling with conscience, realizing that he has made Merrick "a curiosity in a hospital instead of a carnival." The black-and-white film, a somber reflection of Victorian London, lapses at times into exploitation. But Hurt and Hopkins make a deep mark on our sensibilities.

Three 1985 pleasures bow this week.

Tom Hanks and John Candy, the delights of 1984's "Splash," are together again and in top form in Volunteers, a comedy about the Peace Corps deftly directed by Nicholas Meyer. It's 1962 and Hanks, the ultimate Yale snob; Candy, a gung-ho type from Tacoma; and Rita Wilson, a princess-type idealist from New York, are with the Corps in Thailand. There are local crises, opium dealers, Communist guerrillas and a "Bridge on the River Kwai" project that leads to great satire and greater hilarity.

Key Exchange is a light and airy piece of summer fluff made charming by a very good cast. It's about Manhattan yuppies, chief among them a novelist, Ben Masters, who wants an open relationship, and Brooke Adams, a TV producer, who wants it closed by her having a key to his apartment—i.e., commitment. Tony Roberts, as a talk-show host, and Daniel Stern, as Masters' pal, add to the pleasures.

Secret Places, a British film, explores young girls' coming of age in England during World War II—not simply with sexual relationships but, more importantly, with friendships and feelings. The protagonist, beautifully played by Maria Schell's daughter, Marie-Theres Relin, is a German refugee sent to a provincial school where she is not merely a foreigner but an enemy alien. The film deals tenderly with tender subjects.

there was the tragic death of Cleveland DB Don Rogers and the subsequent hue and cry for more (and more comprehensive) drug testing. This week, finally, the NFL is going to play some football games—exhibition games, granted, but games nevertheless—giving fans a chance to see whether all the off-the-field headlines have affected on-the-field play: ABC's Wide World of Sports has the first such practice game, Saturday's St. Louis-New England tilt at Canton, Ohio. NBC's game (Bears vs. Cowboys) has the more exotic venue: Wembley Stadium in London, England.

Elsewhere on the dial we have reruns. Taking them in chronological order, Saturday Night Live repeats its first (and to my knowledge, last) SNL Film Festival. This one features the participation of Robin Williams, Eddie Murphy, Stevie Wonder and film critics Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert. . . . And Moonlighting reprises one of its more satisfying episodes, the one in which Maddie squanders her first profits—on a portrait of herself.

Finally, we come to two programs that will be showing up on various PBS affiliates over the next few weeks. The first—a spirited interview with the incomparable Katharine Hepburn—is certain to delight any film buff. The second is a bizarre test of your science savvy. It's the Ask Dr. Science Official National Science Test, a zany half-hour spoof created by an ensemble that calls itself Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre. "There's a thin line between ignorance and arrogance," says host Dr. Science. "I have managed to erase that line." That should give you an idea of the tone here.

The test comprises eight commonly asked science questions, including this all-time puzzler: "What happens to the other sock when we unload the dryer?" I got two of them right: "How come you never see baby pigeons in the city?" (a lucky guess on my part) and "Why does every magazine you buy have those little cards in them?" (I have to know that—I'm in the business).

In some areas programs may not be seen on the days indicated.

family entertainment, a story of the friendship between a small boy and the one Indian in an isolated turn-of-the-century settlement. Will Sampson, as the aging, drunken Indian who tracks down a bear that has been raiding a farmer's stock and is invited to work for the family, and Charlie Fields, as the boy, are very good.

The third newcomer, made in 1982, is The Flight of Dragons, an animated fantasy, based on the Peter Dickinson book, that is charming for all ages. It involves a trio of medieval wizards who hope to preserve some magic in the oncoming world of science but face destruction by a fourth wizard. To capture his crown of evil power, they enlist a modern young man from Boston. The characters are given warmth by the familiar voices of Harry Morgan, for the main wizard; James Earl Jones, the villain; John Ritter, the Bostonian; and James Gregory, the aged dragon.

Three theatrical repeats are first-rate. 1982's The Ballad of Gregorio Cortez, to be shown on some PBS stations, is a powerful and eloquent fact-based tale of a Mexican fugitive in Texas in 1901. 1984's The World of Tomorrow is a documentary about not only the 1939 World's Fair but also "a lost American yesterday." And 1981's Absence of Malice explores the destructive aspects of a manipulative and manipulated press in a slick and witty melodrama, with Sally Field a reporter and Paul Newman her victim.

There are top TV repeats as well. 1982's The Hunchback of Notre Dame is a brilliant, glowing version of the Hugo classic, with Anthony Hopkins' Quasimodo and Lesley-Anne Down's Esmeralda memorable. 1985's six-hour, two-part Christopher Columbus is a spectacular biography of the Genoese navigator and explorer that also considers the darker side of colonialism. On the contemporary scene, 1983's Confessions of a Married Man has sensitivity and intelligence in its story of a marital breakup, and 1982's Memories Never Die is noteworthy for Lindsay Wagner as a mental patient returning home.

In some areas broadcast movies may not be seen on the days indicated.

have two-man camera crews at most events as is currently the practice. Employees displaced by the new technology will be retrained, he says.

Some economy measures have already been taken at NBC. Earlier this year, news executives issued a memo asking employees to cut costs wherever possible and requesting that first-class airline tickets not be purchased. —A.S.

Stram-Buck Duo To Break Up

Sources at CBS Sports confirm that the network's longtime pro-football announcing team of Hank Stram and Jack Buck will be broken up this season. The plan is to pair play-by-play man Buck with Washington Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann, assuming, as is expected, that Theismann retires from the playing field and joins CBS. —Doug Hill

"Captain Midnight" Arrested by FCC

"Captain Midnight," the self-proclaimed video pirate who broke into Home Box Office's satellite signal last April, has been arrested. The Federal Communications Commission says that John R. MacDougall, a home satellite-dish dealer, has confessed to illegally operating a satellite uplink transmitter.

Richard M. Smith of the FCC's Field Operations Bureau said the agency had put the highest priority on finding Captain Midnight because the potential harm from unauthorized satellite jamming "cannot be underestimated." Smith explained that, with current technology, it is possible to interfere with "emergency communications and Department of Defense communications." Such interference, he said, "could be life-threatening."

MacDougall overrode HBO's signal for four and a half minutes with a message protesting HBO's decision to scramble its satellite signals. —John Weisman

How the Club Works

Every 4 weeks (13 times a year) you get the Club bulletin, PREVIEWS. It offers the Featured Selection plus many Alternatives: books on film, TV, music, sometimes records or videotapes. ★ If you want the Featured Selection, do nothing. It will come automatically. ★ If you don't want the Featured Selection or you do want an Alternative, tell us your wishes on the handy card enclosed and return it by the deadline date. ★ Most Club books sell at 20-30% discounts plus a charge for shipping/handling. ★ As soon as you buy and pay for 4 books, records or videotapes at regular Club prices, your membership may be canceled, either by you or by the Club. ★ If you ever receive a Featured Selection without having had 10 days to decide if you want it, you may return it at Club expense for full credit. ★ For every book, record or videotape you buy at regular Club price, you earn one or more Bonus Book Certificates. They entitle you to buy many Club books at deep discounts, usually 60-80%. Bonus Books don't count toward fulfilling your Club obligation but do let you buy fine books at giveaway prices. ★ PREVIEWS includes news about members

I enclose $1.37. Please accept my membership in the Club and send me, postpaid and at no further cost, John Java's $24.95 Cult TV. I agree to buy 4 additional books, videotapes or records at regular Club prices over the next 2 years. I also agree to the Club rules spelled out in this coupon.

EXHIBITION: COWBOYS VS. BEARS FROM ENGLAND

The Dallas Cowboys take on the Super Bowl champion Chicago Bears in an NFL preseason game at London's Wembley Stadium. (Live)

American pros have been playing exhibitions in England for several years now and the game has rather caught on: week-old replays draw millions of TV viewers on Sunday nights and two U.S.-style football leagues have been formed. What's more, it is likely that this matchup will attract a sellout crowd of some 80,000 fans to Wembley Stadium, site of Live Aid as well as many an English football (soccer) battle.

And those fans should see some of American football's top talent. The Cowboys, written off at the outset of last season, found themselves in their accustomed spot—the top of the NFL East—by regular season's end. And the '85 Bears were simply awesome, climaxing a dream season with a 45-10 drubbing of New England in the Super Bowl.

Dick Enberg, Merlin Olsen and Paul Maguire are the commentators.

CABLE close up

Thanks to a well-meaning social worker who wants "to place stray birds with nice bird families," Big Bird finds himself under the wing of a foster flock named Dodo in distant Illinois.

As befits their name, the Dodos are an eccentric bunch, and a week with them is about his limit. Soon Big Bird becomes a "bird on the run" by high-tailing it back to Sesame Street. But his escape is thwarted when he falls into the clutches of the aptly named Sleaze Brothers (Joe Flaherty, Dave Thomas), who plan to exhibit him in a carnival. Meanwhile, the Sesame Street gang sets out to find their fine-feathered friend.

This 1985 film is rated G. State Trooper: John Candy. Newscaster: Chevy Chase. Truck Driver: Waylon Jennings. Grouch Waitress: Sandra Bernhard. Muppet Voices . . . Caroll Spinney (Big Bird, Oscar); Jim Henson (Kermit the Frog, Ernie); Frank Oz (Cookie Monster, Bert, Grover); Paul Bartel (Grouch Cook). (90 min.)

Famous last words.

People with a drinking problem not only say them, they really believe them.

Because alcoholism destroys more than a drinker's health and family and career. It is a progressive disease that gradually destroys a person's ability to see the truth.

That's why you can't fight it alone.

That's why you need CareUnit.

CareUnit has helped more people with drug and alcohol problems than any other private program in the country.

Our confidential, medically supervised inpatient program helps end both the mental and physical pain of alcohol addiction. And it's covered by most major insurance programs.

So if you or someone you love has a drinking problem, don't keep living on empty promises that could come back to haunt you.

Call CareUnit.

And hear the words that can help you start a whole new life.

9 PM 3 4 8

THE ELEPHANT MAN

Eight Academy Award nominations, including Best Picture, went to this 1980 British movie about John Merrick (1863-90), a victim of the deforming disease neurofibromatosis.

Unlike the 1979 Broadway play by Bernard Pomerance, this version of "The Elephant Man" graphically depicts physical deformity. But it also offers a compassionate portrait of Merrick (portrayed by Oscar nominee John Hurt), who's cruelly exploited as a sideshow freak—until he's rescued by Dr. Frederick Treves (Anthony Hopkins), a surgeon who offers him sanctuary at a London hospital.

Filmed in black and white by director David Lynch ("Eraserhead"), who collaborated on the script with Christopher DeVore and Eric Bergren. (Nominations went to both the direction and screenplay as well as John Morris's score and Patricia Norris's costumes.) Christopher Tucker designed Hurt's makeup. Mrs. Kendal: Anne Bancroft. Gomm: John Gielgud. Mothershead: Wendy Hiller. Bytes: Wendy Jones. Porter: Michael Elphick. Mrs. Treves: Hannah Gordon. Princess Alex: Helen Ryan. Fox: John Standing. Bytes' Boy: Dexter Fletcher. THE LONG NIGHT OF LADY DAY

There's happy blues and there's sad blues. Sort of a mixed-up thing. You just have to feel it. Anything I do sing is part of my life.

—Billie Holiday

A 1984 profile of jazz great Billie Holiday, whose voice often echoed the sadness of her own life—a constant struggle to overcome a troubled childhood, racism and drug addiction. (Her death, in 1959 at age 44, was attributed to drug and alcohol abuse.)

This documentary combines rare filmed performances by Lady Day with reminiscences from friends, among them Artie Shaw (in whose band she sang in the late 1930s), jazz critic Leonard Feather and record producer John Hammond. Holiday, says Shaw, "had a sense of time and a sense of authentic phrasing that was jazz in the best sense of the word." In nightclubs, Hammond recalls, Holiday had the ability to "sing the same tune differently at each table."

These gifts are evident in clips of Holiday singing "Don't Explain," "Fooling Myself," "Strange Fruit" and a memorable 1950s rendition of "Fine & Mellow" (backed by an all-star jazz band featuring Gerry Mulligan, Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young and Roy Eldridge). (90 min.)

What happens after "after"?

Before

After

You've seen the ads. Read the testimonials. Heard the tales of pounds shed painlessly; figures streamlined overnight.

But the sad truth is, four out of five dieters eventually gain back all the weight they lose—and more.

You can get off the see-saw: with the sensible plan you'll learn at the Weight Program at St. Helena Hospital.

For information, call (800) 862-7575.

We'll give your before-and-after story a very happy ending.

The world is on the edge of destruction.
Only one man can save it....but time is running out!

Steven Spielberg

His Stories Aren't Amazing Enough ...Yet

This Hollywood Wunderkind — surprisingly secretive and feared — has found the going rough with his anthology series

By Richard Turner

The way they reacted, you'd have thought I was trying to sell military secrets to the Russians. One day last summer, someone casually mentioned that he'd heard about an interesting upcoming episode of Steven Spielberg's Amazing Stories. Something about Gary Coleman playing the Beaver in an homage to old TV shows. It seemed worth a call or two, maybe a paragraph somewhere in TV GUIDE. So I got on the telephone.

"I can't talk about this—you've got to understand," hissed an actor obviously desperate for publicity and pained by the situation. "No way," said a personal manager who'd always been helpful before. "He wouldn't show me the script," said a representative of another actor on the show. "Please," begged an NBC executive, "I've got an 800-pound gorilla on my hands."

After a while, a common theme began to emerge. These people were scared. Scared? Of Steven Spielberg? That benevolent troll, that kindly gremlin whose gentle fantasies transport millions? Scared? They were terrified.

This was, after all, in many senses, the most powerful man in Hollywood: he had made more money for the movie business than any filmmaker in history. And now he was moving into television. TV may be more profitable than motion pictures, but it's less prestigious. Tom Selleck may be better known than Marlon Brando, but who has the aura, the larger-than-life presence? When Spielberg stepped into the small screen, it was like seven-leagued boots echoing through the Hollywood hills.

So the TV villagers changed the rules for him right away. NBC gave him an on-air series commitment for Amazing Stories, sight unseen, which is rare enough. But they didn't give him a six-show order, a 13-show order, or even a full-season, 22-show order. They ordered 44 shows, two years' worth, and later added on a couple of extra. Then they offered him full creative control: no one would monitor his dailies, and he wouldn't be responsible to anyone at the network except the standards and practices department, and there, says an executive, "He's getting away with stuff [former Hill Street Blues executive producer] Steven Bochco would kill for."

And most of all, they offered money. When most half-hour shows were lucky to get $350,000 from the networks per episode, Spielberg was getting almost $1-million. Some producers worried that NBC wasn't going to have enough development money left over for them. "He's getting all the Cosby profits," complained a studio executive.

Spielberg himself appeared on the cover of Time, which referred to him as "a modern Peter Pan." His office complex at Universal Studios was described as a "big happy tepee" where Spielberg "dreams for a living" while a golden retriever frolics through the halls. Spielberg "hated" how he looked on the Time cover, but it's hard to see how he could have asked for more flattering attention, and the portrait was typical, as if he were a character in one of his own movies.

Sequled in his Xanadu-like club-house, Spielberg may not be embraced by his colleagues, but he is an insider, a consummate Hollywood operator. "Don't kid yourself," said a former associate. "This guy knows the seating capacity of every theater in Cleveland."

What other illusions were there about Spielberg? What was he like to work with? Would he be fun to go to the ballgame with? Did he collect stamps? To find out, it would be necessary to penetrate a very formidable wall.

"I'm a control freak," Spielberg has said, and when he appeared before the national press prior to the launching of his TV series last September, it was in highly controlled circumstances, by satellite video. He spent much of the time defending his decision not to release storylines or preview screenings for the show—a move NBC had fought, and which was later reversed. (Indeed, nowadays series' publicists call the press with storylines and practically beg for coverage.)

Spielberg tends his public image carefully, and it's no coincidence that stories about him are almost universally positive. He takes great interest in publicity photos of himself—throwing out ones where fellow filmmaker George Lucas was in the foreground, two sources say. When the Los Angeles Times depicted E.T. with a coke spoon around his neck, the reaction from the Spielberg camp "was instantaneous and a shriek," recalls an editor. A deal was cut so that a piece apologizing to E.T. for the illustration ran the following week.

His films operate under code names ("A Boy's Life" for "E.T.") and crew members wear badges with their pictures on them. Those who work at his gnomish Santa Fe-style headquarters on the Universal back lot must sign nondisclosure agreements. "E.T." star Dee Wallace Stone said she asked for an exception—could she talk to her husband?—and was granted it. One producer who was to receive a script for Amazing Stories was told it couldn't be delivered to his office, only his home. One worker was told to write a synopsis of a film—without a script. Scripts are numbered in red so that photocopies can be easily detected. "We surely aren't dealing with atom-bomb secrets," is Spielberg's explanation. "TV and movies aren't nearly as important as anything like that—but it just shows [employees] that what we do here is special."

As a result of the secrecy, Amazing Stories premiered with some fanfare, and the critics were ready. "What's So Amazing?" was the obvious headline, and the reviews were tough. It didn't help that the first installment, "Ghost Train," looked like a parody of previous Spielberg movies, except shorter, on the small screen, and with irreverent jokes stuck in casually as if to say, "We're just having fun here"—the wrong attitude to take with those who treat television seriously and suspected Spielberg was just dabbling. No one knew how the Spielberg name would translate to television, and visions of 40 shares danced in NBC heads. Instead, the shares hovered in the 20s. Spielberg says, "I don't understand ratings. . . . I'm a much happier individual if I don't get involved in grosses or ratings."

It was shortly after this dubious debut that my interview with Spielberg was canceled, rescheduled, then rescheduled again—to a Sunday, at his beach house north of Malibu. That Sunday morning, the phone rang. Steven was sick, the publicist said. His wife, actress Amy Irving, was adamant that he rest. After that, Spielberg became unavailable for the next three months, and I wondered whether he'd decided that the first question of any Amazing Stories interview would be, "What happened?"

Perhaps Spielberg had reason to be paranoid. A backlash was settling in, which would culminate in his fellow directors denying him an Oscar nomination as best director for "The Color Purple." "Steven Spielberg grits his teeth in his sleep," read one piece of local graffiti. I'd tell people I was doing a story on Spielberg; they'd say, "I hate that guy," but wouldn't be able to say quite why—maybe something about how he had fulfilled every fantasy and ambition but still looked like a kid at the Science Fair. The only real articulation of anti-Spielbergism comes from film critic Pauline Kael, who said, "It's not so much what Spielberg has done but what he has encouraged. Everyone else has imitated his fantasies, and the result is an infantilization of the culture. Spielberg, with his TV series, now rips off his own things. I can't think of any other director who's started paying homage to himself so early."

People keep knocking Spielberg, but it's hard to think it's personal, when so little is known of his personal life. He works all the time, though friends say he's less "obsessed" since the birth of his son, Max, in June '85. His house contains "Rosebud," the sled from "Citizen Kane," as well as many framed mementos of his triumphs, headlines about boffo box office. He's scared of elevators. He loves video games. In the office game room, several machines have "SS" punched in for "high score." Co-workers tittered about the stalactites (since removed) and fake-stone-front refrigerator in the Jacuzzi room, where one pool was reserved for the man himself. A beach-front friend says Spielberg will visit and sometimes, in a particularly relaxed moment, have "an eighth of a glass of wine." He loves TV, and told me that in the new house he's building, Irving has insisted there be only two televisions, "which is hard for me because I'm used to a TV in every room."

On the job, Spielberg is extremely demanding. "His attitude is, this is the best job in Hollywood and you'd better appreciate it," says a former associate. "People are scared of him and he assumes a huge place in people's minds. They see him like a god." He doesn't lead with his personality, though. He's too unassuming for that. He doesn't say hello in the corridors. "He doesn't observe the social graces except when he has to," says the former associate. When he grew cold on one employee, he simply stopped speaking to her until she quit. He genuinely feels more comfortable with kids and women, and though Spielberg employees are not especially well paid ("He's afraid all his money is going to slip away"), he does reward his circle: a trip to Hawaii for a hard-working assistant, a car for the decorator of the office complex. But "he never asks anybody about their personal lives. His only subject of conversation is the movies." When a scene in "E.T." didn't please him, he said to the crew, "Well, you didn't get it. Think about that tonight." Says someone who was there: "There was no 'nice try'—nothing."

Spielberg doesn't forget things, either. He is said to ignore two key executives at MCA/Universal because while at Columbia Pictures they rejected a project called "E.T.," reasoning that they already had "Starman" in the works and the theme worked better with a love story than with kids. Dee Wallace Stone got into a spat with Spielberg when she was asked to forgo her star billing in the film's credits. She said she would if they'd feature her in national publicity. They refused, and since then, the leading actress in the → most popular motion picture of all time has had a decidedly non-meteoric career, which sources say is no coincidence. Asked if she was blacklisted, Stone said, "I have no comment about that."

Ninety per cent of the people I contacted refused to talk to me, and those who did were so insistent about anonymity that one actually had an attorney present at a late-night rendezvous. No one questioned Spielberg's technical and visual genius as a director; they just complained that because he was a vaguely unpleasant guy sometimes, it bugged them to see his press clippings portray some sort of friendly elf.

By the time I finally met him, the image that had been coming to my mind was the Wizard of Oz. I walked past the barbed wire into his Universal Studios complex, which was eerily quiet. People's heads were buried in their work, and fresh vegetables were scattered around the place (the candies that once were plentiful were banished when Spielberg became more health conscious). The place looked a little like Disneyland, with an old, hay-filled wagon out back for decoration. The screening room had a push-button curtain revealing a concession stand. The original model for E.T. stood in a workroom. Outside Spielberg's office was a plaque about the Boy Scouts signed by Jimmy Stewart, a Time cover signed by Michael Jackson, a Norman Rockwell painting.

Spielberg entered quietly. This is not a man who commands a room when he walks into it; friends say he can put on glasses and a floppy hat and go to movie theaters unrecognized, and when he visited the set of Family Ties, Michael J. Fox, mistaking him for the guy who used to operate the boom, called out, "Hey, Murray, you old dirtbag!" But when we sat down, he switched on his personal tape recorder and a good deal of one-on-one charm.

He wasn't much for small talk: asked about his shirt by the publicist, he blandly reported the street where he bought it. But he had some points he wanted to make about Amazing Stories, and he made them skillfully. He was not alarmed by the ratings, though NBC is: the network has asked him to "broaden the appeal of the show" to eliminate "the kiddie factor." He recounted how Universal had let him direct a Night Gallery with Joan Crawford when he was 21, and how he was giving young directors a chance, too. Next season he'd direct from two to four episodes himself before doing a film in October: "A feature film is a full exercise program and Amazing Stories is like a quick hundred push-ups—it's just a great way to keep in shape." He praised a new "dramatic honesty" in television and said, "If it weren't for Hill Street Blues, I probably wouldn't have made Amazing Stories at all." The only heat he ever got from standards and practices, he said, was for the murder scene in "The Amazing Falsworth"—the episode was moved to 9 o'clock.

He got a little uncomfortable when I asked him if he was difficult to work for. "It's hard to say, I'm trying to think. . . . I'm not a bully and I don't give orders, is what I won't do. I'm very collaborative, but what I try to do is inspire into people who are collaborating that they've got to collaborate with me better than they have ever collaborated with anybody before. And so in that sense I'm demanding. I mean, I expect the best of anybody who works here."

In the corridor after the interview, again the small talk was a little strange. One of the many toys lying around his office was a rubber heart with an aorta that pulsed in and out when you pushed a button. "Max loves it. He calls it his 'Temple of Doom' heart," said Spielberg, alluding to his 1984 hit, "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom." I'm thinking to myself, "Wait a minute. Max can't 'call' it anything. He's 7 months old." Weird . . . the only place where little babies talk, and particularly refer to bits of cinematic history relating to their fathers, is in the movies. I left the place feeling that Steven Spielberg was somehow just as unreal as he'd seemed in the beginning. END

Three Sneers for the Invasion of American Football

A proper Englishman fears its seductive effect on British culture

By Alan Coren

NBC plans to telecast the exhibition game between the Chicago Bears and the Dallas Cowboys from London on Sunday, Aug. 3, at 1 P.M. (ET). Check Sports Calendar for time and channel.

There are three big dates in the history of English football. The first is A.D. 878. The country had for some years been full of uninvited Danes who, sick of blue cheese, glum poems and large unresponsive blondes, had paddled across the North Sea in search of rape, pillage, arson and other high-profile leisure activities they were not allowed to pursue at home. The invaded English took an enormous amount of stick until King Alfred built an army and hammered the Danes so soundly that the entire country rang to cries of "Onkel!"

As the result of one particular victory in 878 at Chester, the losing Danish general was decapitated, and—the English being then, as now, a sporting bunch of chaps—his head was kicked by a group of singing soldiers from the Guildhall to the Common Hall of the city (a distance of some 1200 yards) and back again.

The event proved so popular that it was revived on the anniversary, in 879. By this time, of course, the original head was in no shape for the game, so a pig's bladder was inflated and used as a ball. This is commonly held by my fellow historians to be the beginning of English football. The ball was never picked up, presumably because no one would feel like doing that to either a severed head or a pig's organs. Thus the custom became a rule, enshrined in a game that, over the next millennium, developed into English soccer as we know it today.

Hands were not involved in the game until the second big date. This was 1823, when William Webb Ellis, a smart pupil at Rugby School, suddenly realized that kicking a ball upfield wasn't necessarily the best method of getting it there. Carrying it would probably work better. So, in the middle of a soccer game, he bent down, picked up the ball and ran. His ingenuity and nerve were rewarded in the traditional way in which Britain recognizes innovation: Ellis was set upon by the entire school and beaten to within an inch of his life.

After a bit, however, other eccentrics around the country began to imitate Ellis, and in 1871 the rules of rugby football were formalized. These were incomprehensible to anyone without at least two degrees, and rugby thus remained an elitist sport until the rise of universal free college education, some 80 years later. I shall not bore you with all the rules, especially since many of you may have only one degree, but the really big one is that the ball may not be passed forward. The ball is passed laterally as the entire team runs forward. It is a crazy way to get upfield, and it probably explains why the third big date in English football was bound to happen.

That date was Nov. 14, 1982. It was the day when Britain switched on its TV sets and suddenly, for the first time, saw a rugby ball being hurled forward. Thousands of us fainted.

Upon recovery, our first thought was to march on the stadium and, true to form, set upon the offending players and beat them within an inch of their lives. That we did not was partly due to the awareness that this might pose problems since, instead of being schoolboys, the creatures involved were around 8 feet square and appeared to be carrying enough armor to ward off the first-strike capability of NATO. But it was mainly due to the sudden realization that these were, in fact, Americans.

So, thankfully accepting that we were watching not renegade Britons at all but a bunch of characteristically unprincipled Yanks, we sank back into our armchairs, popped another beer can, and settled down for a comfortable sneer.

I have to tell you that it is a matter of considerable chagrin to me personally to reveal that while, according to the ratings, a mere 859,000 accidentally trapped viewers watched this first American football game four years ago, no fewer than four million now watch regularly, with an audience of more than 6.3 million for the Super Bowl game from New Orleans last January.

Whence, you cry, springs this chagrin? Why do I not welcome this new boon as yet another example of hands across the sea, like the growing enthusiasm for wallbangers, jogging, designer enchiladas and bombing Libya?

I do not welcome it because not only is the nation gripped by a fever of watching, it is also gripped by a fever of playing. There are now more than 200 teams of Englishmen regularly playing American football. You cannot walk across an English field without stumbling upon a group of kids colliding with one another, usually egged on by some sinister American tourist eager to poison their susceptible little minds.

And deep down, there is in me, perhaps, a greater spiritual unease than that occasioned by the mere corruption of our youth. How long can it be before not simply our sport but our very culture is eroded beyond repair? For sport gives a nation its heroic modes and metaphors. Is there, I respectfully enquire, a citizen among you able to lay his hand on his heart and say he did not vote for Ronald Reagan solely on the strength of his performance as George Gipp, the All-America hero whom your great leader is not slow to invoke when the political chips are down?

OK, I shall be there, glued to the tube, when the Chicago Bears go in against the Dallas Cowboys and rip up the turf of a Wembley Stadium hitherto consecrated to soccer alone. I may even enjoy the game. But I tell you this. The day Margaret Thatcher stands up and, with a calculated tear in her eye, begs me to win one for the Gipper, that's the day I vote Labour. (END)

Against All Odds Just What Cable Didn't Need— Another Cultural Network

But the no-frills A&E Network came in and succeeded where all others had failed

By Neil Hickey

It was a long shot no matter how you looked at it. Already, three "cultural" cable channels had crashed and burned. One of them, CBS Cable, had been a truly spectacular flameout, costing CBS more than $30 million in losses, even though its programs had won raves from the critics and the public. The so-called ARTS cable service had died in infancy. And The Entertainment Channel had failed conspicuously to persuade enough cable customers to pay an extra-added monthly fee—as HBO and Showtime subscribers do—to receive operas, dramas, ballets and concerts. Besides, public television was comfortably in place, and had been for decades, serving up high-grade performing-arts programs on good old-fashioned over-the-air "free" television that reached practically the whole Nation. So who needed another "cultural" cable network?

Needed or not, on Feb. 1, 1984, the Arts & Entertainment (A&E) Network began transmitting programs to 1500 cable systems comprising nine million subscribers. It had one advertiser, and its principal asset was a deal with the BBC giving it first crack at a range of British programs. The prognosis for its good health and long life was guarded, and many experts were sure its bleached skeleton was destined for the same boneyard as its well-meaning and misguided predecessors.

This week, A&E is six months short of its third birthday and is now carried by 2200 cable systems in the U.S. and Canada; it reaches almost 20-million cable subscribers and boasts scores of big-ticket corporate advertisers. Before the end of the year, it will be operating in the black.

A&E is one of the more remarkable success stories in television these days. It's also a most peculiar breed of bird, in that it has family ties to two of the three old-line broadcast networks, ABC and NBC. It rose from the ashes of the ARTS service (the creature of ABC and the Hearst Corp.) and The Entertainment Channel (owned by RCA, the parent of NBC, and a company called Rockefeller Center, Inc.). It inherited from The Entertainment Channel the valuable BBC deal, and in the first year or so of operation, A&E was, in fact, a kind of BBC-West, since two-thirds of its programming came from that network. The figure is now less than 40 per cent.

When ABC, RCA and Hearst decided to create A&E, their guiding premise was that the new channel would have to earn its keep. It was OK for PBS to be nonprofit, but A&E would live or die in the marketplace like any other commercial product.

That meant being lean, mean, cautious, prudent, sure-footed, miserly → and canny—everything that those previous "cultural" cable networks were not. It meant acquiring previously made programs rather than creating brand-new ones. It meant haunting the program flea markets of the world to pick up bargains that were appropriate and affordable.

That strategy resulted in a program schedule of unexpected richness and variety: jazz performances by George Shearing, Stephane Grappelli, Wynton Marsalis, Alberta Hunter and Art Blakey; concerts with Lena Horne, Tony Bennett, and the Broadway team of Betty Comden and Adolph Green; operas like "Die Fledermaus," "Don Giovanni," "Tosca," "La Bohème," "Fidelio," "Idomeneo" and "The Tales of Hoffmann"; dramatizations of classics such as "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Oliver Twist," "Pickwick Papers," "Great Expectations," "Vanity Fair" and "Jane Eyre"; symphonic works conducted by Andre Previn, José Serebrier and Zubin Mehta; classic movies such as Fellini's "8½," Eisenstein's "Alexander Nevsky," Fritz Lang's "Scarlet Street" and Lubitsch's "That Uncertain Feeling"; chats with celebrities like Joshua Logan, William Styron, Philip Johnson and Richard Attenborough; documentaries on such subjects as the creation (by George Gershwin) of "Porgy and Bess," rural life in China, the culture of the Hopi Indians, Elvis Presley and his fans, the paintings of 17th-century Dutch masters and the making of New York's Central Park; profiles of George Orwell, John James Audubon and Béla Bartók.

Two of the network's most ambitious offerings have been a 10-part miniseries, lavishly produced by the BBC, on the Borgias; and a six-parter on the life of Sigmund Freud. And A&E occasionally resurrects series that flopped on the old-line networks, but which it deems worthy of reprise: Buffalo Bill, United States and Breaking Away, for example.

The A&E schedule is a kind of death-defying high-wire act, born of economic need and the desire to serve a discriminating audience, while at the same time maximizing viewership. Andrew Orgel, vice-president of affiliate sales and marketing, says, "Our mission is to offer entertainment, informational and cultural programming of interest to a discerning, adult audience. All of our programs must fit that definition."

So who is actually watching? The most recent Nielsen rating for A&E was 0.7 per minute, which translates roughly into 130,000 homes. Almost two-thirds of A&E's audience, according to an independent research study, is in the desirable 18-49-year-old age group, and almost 64 per cent earn more than $30,000 a year. A third are college graduates; one-fourth are in "professional/managerial" occupations and another fourth have "clerical/sales/technical" jobs. In other words, it's a swanky class of viewers, roughly the same people that public broadcasting attracts.

Which raises the question: with PBS a longstanding and successful staple of our TV-watching lives, who needs A&E? Or conversely, when A&E gets bigger and richer, who will need PBS? After all, A&E pays its own way, without taxpayer dollars or charity from viewers.

Both camps are quick to say there's no incompatibility; that the two networks can live in peace indefinitely. "We're in different businesses," says Suzanne Weil, PBS's programming chief. "Most of our material is in the mainstream and theirs is more offbeat and esoteric. There's nothing they've had that we've lusted after. We very much welcome their presence. I suspect we build an audience for each other." PBS has a vastly larger audience, she points out, and no cable network will ever reach the 97 per cent of TV homes that PBS does. "And there are lots of people who can't afford cable. The great blessing of public television is that it's free."

The most obvious difference between the two is the makeup of their respective schedules. In one representative year (1984), PBS's lineup was 55 per cent public affairs/nonfiction programs (Nova, Nature, Frontline, MacNeil/Lehrer, Nation- al Geographic, et al.), 21 per cent educational programs, and only 23 per cent "cultural" (Great Performances, Live from Lincoln Center, et al.). Meanwhile, A&E was running about 90 per cent performing arts/fictional programs.

One of A&E's big problems is that it has so much time to fill—20 hours a day, seven days a week, which is more than PBS—on a fraction of PBS's program budget. As a result, "they run a whole lot of stuff that's not good enough for public television," says Henry Becton Jr., president of Boston's public station, WGBH-TV. The Borgias, for example, was "terrible," he maintains: "badly produced, awful acting." Not to mention that one of the Borgias, Rodrigo, bought his way to the Papacy, became Pope Alexander VI, and reigned too riotously to be an appropriate subject for the more staid and politically sensitive PBS.

With all of its problems, however, A&E is clearly a cable idea whose time has come. (Its slogan: "C_BL_ : it just wouldn't be the same without A&E.") "We've had a wonderful roller-coaster ride," says Nickolas Davatzes, president of the network. "We're making a business where others have failed." A&E does, in fact, help the industry fulfill what used to be called "the promise of cable": namely that it should be a narrowcasting service with something for the special interests and needs of many constituencies, not just people who like sitcoms, game shows and soap operas. Those tastes are well served by ABC, CBS and NBC.

Clearly, A&E is delivering some of the very best of the world's television. It has more actors, dancers, singers and musicians on a daily basis than any network, and a range of arts programming never before done by an advertiser-supported TV network.

A&E was a long shot all right, but every now and then even the most reckless gambler draws to an inside straight. That's what they're doing over at the Arts & Entertainment Network. END

Bring Back the Instant News Specials

An important source of perspective on major, breaking stories is disappearing—leaving viewers less informed

By Ernest Leiser

Once upon a time, when there was a major, breaking news story, you could count on the networks to carry special broadcasts, in prime time at best and at 11:30 P.M. (ET) at least, to supplement their half-hour evening news broadcasts. No longer.

When the Chernobyl nuclear disaster became known to the outside world, the ABC, CBS and NBC nightly news shows went all out in their coverage. But only ABC, with Ted Koppel's regularly scheduled 11:30 Nightline, provided additional coverage that first night or on subsequent nights. And the high quality of the Nightline programs and the background and perspective they provided gave the lie to the arguments of CBS and NBC that, after Rather and Brokaw had done their thing, there was really nothing to add.

The near-disappearance of the "instant special," as well as the radical reduction in the number of prime-time documentaries on all three networks, are painful signs that the news divisions have abandoned key parts of their franchises. Morning news shows, seen mostly by small audiences, cannot make up for what is being forsaken. Nor, with occasional exceptions, do the magazine shows deal with the urgent stories of today.

It can be argued—and the network news chiefs and their publicists do argue—that when there is a really big story, like the U.S. air attack on Libya, there are still prime-time pre-emptions of the entertainment schedule. But the Libya example is deceptive: ABC, CBS and NBC went on the air at 9 that night because the President was making a statement to the Nation, and, when the President has something important to say or a news conference to give, it is unusual for the networks to turn their backs. And all three stayed on because the Secretaries of State and Defense had agreed to answer questions about the American raid. Then, and only then, did ABC, CBS and NBC add their own interpretive coverage. It was good. It was also extremely rare.

In past times, there would have been nighttime specials on the fierce controversy over the World War II record of Kurt Waldheim; on the first hundred days of Corazon Aquino; on the angry reaction of the NATO Allies to the Administration threat to abandon adherence to SALT II; on the scathing final report of the Pres- → idential commission on the space-shuttle disaster. But no longer.

Less rare are the brief interruptions—mainly of the daytime schedule—for "updates" of breaking stories. During the hijacking of the TWA plane and its passengers, there were frequent special reports, but even then there was no programming that pre-empted the networks' prime-time schedules except for one Presidential press conference.

When Van Gordon Sauter returned as president of CBS News late last year, one of the promises he made to his staff was to restore the 11:30 half hours to their once-prominent place on the schedule. But, as it turned out, he was either unable or unwilling to get any substantial number of instant specials on the air.

In the last few months, CBS News has done only one 11:30 half hour and the circumstances for that were unusual indeed. On the day Chief Justice Warren Burger unexpectedly announced his retirement, Bill Moyers had been scheduled to interview him for a program to be shown the following month on Burger's plans for the bicentennial celebration of the U.S. Constitution. To the surprise and delight of those concerned, Burger not only did not cancel the interview but agreed to discuss with Moyers his leaving the Court. That provided the core of a special (neither NBC nor ABC did one) of which CBS was justifiably proud. But breaks of that kind—and the broadcasts that result—are few and far between.

It was not always thus. I can speak with direct knowledge about CBS News, where, for nearly 15 years, Les Midgley and I alternated as executive producers of special reports, and where, into the '80s, I served as the management honcho for the instant specials we did with frequency and regularity.

Indeed, there was an in-house joke among my bosses. Whenever a big story broke, they said, I would come charging into the office of the CBS News president and demand that we do an hour that night in prime time. Sometimes they agreed, but by no means always.

So the negotiating process began.

OK, they would say, you can have 15 minutes at 11:30, knowing that I would object belligerently. Ultimately, there would be the compromise they had in mind all the time. CBS News would go on at 11:30 to do a half hour. And a good many of those half hours were broadcasts of some distinction.

Tempting as it is to go back to the good old days—or "yesterday's television," if you prefer—when there were four or five instant specials a month, on average, let me select the year 1981, when CBS News produced 19 broadcasts at 11:30. The subjects ranged from the war in El Salvador, to the new space shuttle, to the first three months of the Reagan Presidency, to the appointment of the first woman to the Supreme Court, to memorials to Roy Wilkins and Lowell Thomas, to the controversy over the sale of AWACS planes to Saudi Arabia, to a Walter Cronkite conversation with the new president of Egypt.

I suspect that none of these would qualify today, on CBS or NBC, as "compelling" enough subjects to merit special time on the air. Leave them to Rather or Brokaw or the Today show or the Morning News or Nightwatch on CBS. In 1985, for instance, there was a total of only five 11:30 specials on CBS, and four of those were in June on the TWA hijacking.

The viewing public thus has good reason to be thankful to ABC and its fidelity, so far, to Nightline. First, it is a consistently good series, whether or not it deals with breaking news. Second, it is the only remaining bastion on television of the "instant special."

These are not particularly good times for the network news divisions or the public they serve. Just when more people rely on television for the information they need, an important source of that information is disappearing from the tube. As a one-time network news president once said, "What you don't know can kill you." END

If you hesitate to take seasonal allergy medications because they may make you drowsy...

You may be a "silent sufferer"

Do you avoid seasonal allergy (hay fever) medications altogether? Do you delay taking them for as long as possible? Do you take less than you actually need? If the answer to any of these questions is "yes," you rank among the "silent sufferers" who endure symptoms rather than risk possible side effects that could interfere with daily activities. And, chances are, the side effect you want to bypass is sedation, the chief complaint of both physicians and patients about anti-allergy products.

Significant advances in treatment

Important advances in treatments for seasonal allergy have been made. Effective relief of symptoms without the degree of sedation associated with commonly used anti-allergy products is now available.

Ask your doctor about the treatment alternatives

There are various alternative treatments available. Only your doctor can determine which form of treatment is best for you because only he or she knows you and your personal history of seasonal allergy. Effective relief, therefore, starts with a visit to your doctor, who will assess your condition, recommend a program of therapy, and follow your progress.
